It was said by those who argued in favour of Con-Coderation that if we valued British institutions if we valued our rights add privileges as British sablests, we would accede to Confederation. He, bowever, hightwined that were we to become a member of the projected Union. we would actually be deprived of all these, and refrograde a century. Confederation, dustead of being a means of bluding us more closely and judissolubly to the British Crown. would eventually be the cause of our separation form if The moment the Upper House should come inte collision with the Lower Bouse, some extreme measure would be had recourse to. Should we, however, remain as we were: we would be safe. If we entered into Confederation, we would he much more in danger of quarreling with the United States than we are now. As we were, should we be assailed by the United States, what would Great Britain do with us, but protect us? The glory argument was; that, by confederating with Carada and the other Provinces, we should become part and parcel of a great nation; but the people of Prince Edward Leland knew themselves to be already part and parcel of a great nation, and they had so destro it belong to any other.
