British government we would yet see brighter days. He felt proud brings British abylest, and desired no other yet was not the rule of a mee of French erry was not been and of a mee of French erry was not been and of a mee of French erry was not been and the been an he salaries provided for the teachers. But still he admitted tifat notwithstanding the inadequate salaries, young men came to be trained, and the Boards commanded the services of parties, after being trained, although their emoluments succertainly under least than it was derivable still the their services of efficient teachers in the salaries of the salaries and the salaries an caim enquire, keeping in view, as well the present, as the probable future effects on the people of this Colony."

The SPEAKER said he had not hitherto had an opportunity of making any observations respecting his Excelency's speech; and perhaps it was scarcely necessary for him to say anything regarding a speech which was so very satisfactory to hou gentlemen on both sides of the flouse. For the first time fsince he (the Speaker) rhad the honor of a seat in that House, had he heard the members on the opposition side praise the speech from the throne. Hon members on the opposition benches indorsed in complimentary language the important practical suggestions of his Excellency's speech. It was evident, however, that these hon gentlemen, in their ignorance of constitutional stages, regarded the speech as emanating from the Governor himsen, and not the embodiment of the poilty of his constitutional advisers; and it was not until that experienced priliamentary statician, the hon members fight, that they became aware that they were bestowing the most unqualified commendation upon the ponicy of his (the Speaker's) hon friend, the leader of the government. One hon member said it was a parliamentary fiction that the speech was the speech of the ministry. He (the Speaker) must say that this was notel constitutional doctine emanating from a professed admirer of responsible government. Next day, however, there was some attempt to find fault, but it was so feeble that it was not entitled to notice. Le (the Speaker) did say the members of the Government had reason to congratulate themselves upon this unqualified indorsation of their poincy by the opposition. With respect to bis Excellency's appeach, he (the Speaker) would observe that he had Issened to few speeches couched in more elegant language, and he must congratuate the House and the country upon the choice Her Majesty had made of a Governor of so much ability and intellectuality, to admirate the House and the must have been highly appreciated by Her Mayesty a Government when he was ampointed to such a high and responsible sides as the government of this time. The provided of public interest in the colory are according to the colory of the c our population. Lews a treaty, which, if carried on, won leve as all one great, country, extending free and prosperity we would participate, and whose gives and renow would be the inhirated ourse and renow would be the inhirated ourse and renow would be the inhirated ourse and renow would be the surprise of the control of the control of Mr. Bennett, had hither gage in mining operations, hat our mines should be with a signification of militie of either had compared the silver of the silve